There may be no better way to combat violent extremism than education for global competence. It encourages analysis and reflection, communication and action.

—Anthony Jackson, p. 18

Being cosmopolitan and being patriotic are not mutually exclusive.

—Shivam Bhatt, p. 80

Intelligent machines will create a different kind of working world, one that our students must be prepared for. The ability to learn new things will be at a premium.

—Marc Tucker, p. 30

Educating for global competence is no longer a luxury, but a necessity.

—Veronica Boix Mansilla, p. 10

One-sided accounts of other cultures may lead students to develop a condescending attitude of sympathy and minimize their opportunities to understand another people.

—Yekaterina McKenney, p. 49

Regardless of their educational path, students moving into adulthood today need more than anything else to be voracious, passionate learners.

—Will Richardson, p. 24

We believe that if our students are to become global partners, we—as teachers—must become global partners as well.

—Jean Kirshner, Eli Tzib, Zilpa Tzib, and Sara Fry, p. 73
